

PIERRE-YVES DONZÉ

HISTORY OF
THE SWISS WATCH INDUSTRY

FROM JACQUES DAVID TO NICOLAS HAYEK

TRANSLATED BY PIERRE-YVES DONZÉ AND
RICHARD WATKINS

PETER LANG

Bern · Berlin · Bruxelles · Frankfurt am Main · New York · Oxford · Wien

Table of Contents

Introduction	1
1. The Swiss Watch Industry during the first part of the 19th century (1800–1870)	5
1.1 The triumph of établissage	7
An example of an établisseur: the DuBois family of Le Locle	9
Why was établissage successful?	12
1.2 The technical evolution of products	14
An innovation directed to the quality of products	15
The hard beginnings of mechanization	18
1.3 The outlets of the Swiss watch industry: the global market	19
1.4 Rival nations	22
2. The challenge of industrialization (1870–1918)	27
2.1 The shock of Philadelphia: the American competitors	28
2.2 The structural modernization of Swiss watchmaking	31
The emergence of the factory	32
Birth of the machine tools industry	40
The modernization of watchmaking schools	42
Banks and the modernization of watchmaking	45
The organization of trade unions	47
A limited industrial concentration	51
2.3 Selling: evolution of products and markets	54
The beginning of mass communication	56
2.4 Towards organized capitalism	59
The blooming of employers' associations	60
The Société Intercantonale des Industries du Jura – Chambre Suisse de l'Horlogerie	63
The temptation of cartels	64

2.5	The Swiss watch industry during World War I	66
	The production of munitions	66
	The closure of the Russian market	68
3.	The watchmaking cartel (1920–1960)	75
3.1	The problem of chablonnage and the struggle against industrial transplantation	76
	The United States	79
	Japan	81
3.2	The maintenance of an industrial district structure	83
3.3	The setting up of the cartel	85
	The adoption of watchmaking agreements (1928)	85
	Setting up a trust: the creation of the ASUAG (1931)	89
	The legal intervention of the State (1934)	94
	The labor peace agreement	97
3.4	The consequences of the cartel	99
	The maintenance of the structures	99
	The creation of the Société suisse pour l'industrie horlogère SA (SSIH)	101
	The failure of the struggle against chablonnage and the emergence of new watchmaking nations	102
3.5	New products, new markets	105
4.	Liberalization and globalization (1960–2010)	115
4.1	Decartelization	117
	Maintaining control over Swiss production	119
4.2	The quartz revolution	120
4.3	The origins of the “watchmaking crisis”	123
4.4	Industrial concentration and the appearance of watch groups	128
	The first wave of mergers	129
	The birth of the Swatch Group	131
	The main watch groups in the 2000s	134

An independent firm: Rolex	135
The exception of Geneva: the evolution of luxury watch makers during the second part of the 20th century	136
4.5 The globalization of ownership and manufacturing	139
Some subcontractors coping with globalization: the case makers	140
4.6 Towards luxury	143
Conclusion	151
References	153