2.5.7.3 Geography and Culture 60
2.5.7.4 Skillsets and Education 61
2.5.7.5 Benefit, Lifestyle, and Psychographic Segmentation 62
2.5.8 Ethical and Legal Considerations Regarding Segmentation and Recruitment 62
2.6 Contingency Theory 64
2.7 Summary 67
3 Research Design and Methods 69
3.1 Theoretical Framework for the Study 69
3.2 Qualitative Research Design 71
3.3 Grounded Theory 72
3.3.1 Epistemological Paradigm of the Grounded Theory Method 73
3.4 Method 74
3.5 Sample 75
3.6 Procedure 76
3.6.1 Interview Technique and Technology 77
3.6.2 Development of the Interview Guide 78
3.7 Data Analysis and Monitoring 82
3.8 Summary 83
4 Findings and Analysis 85
4.1 Procedure 86
4.2 Interviews 90
4.3 Data Analysis 90
4.4 Data Results 91
4.4.1 When and by Whom Are Segmentation and Targeting Used in the Recruitment of High Potentials in the Pharmaceutical Industry in Europe and the United States? 91
4.4.2 Why Are These Concepts Used or Not Used in the Pharmaceutical Industry? 93
4.4.3 If These Concepts Are Used in the Pharmaceutical Industry, Which Attributes of High Potentials Are Deemed Important and Which Segmentation Bases and Methods Are Used? 95
4.4.4 What Other Concepts and Instruments Are Currently Used in the Pharmaceutical Industry and Why? 96
4.5 Summary of Findings 97
4.6 Analysis and Synopsis of the Study 98

4.7 Overview of the Emerging Grounded Theory 100
4.8 Discussion of the Emerging Grounded Theory 101
4.9 Category One: Technological Capabilities 106
4.9.1 Emergence of Social Media as a Recruiting Tool 107
4.9.2 The Use of the Internet as a Communication Platform 110
4.9.3 The Availability of Data-Mining Tools 110
4.9.4 Summary of Technological Capabilities 112
4.10 Category Two: The Scarcity of Certain Groups of High Potentials 112
4.10.1 Summary of Scarcity of High Potentials 118
4.11 Category Three: HR Attitudes, Opinions, and Strategies 119
