

PIERRE-YVES DONZÉ

HISTORY OF THE SWISS WATCH INDUSTRY

FROM JACQUES DAVID TO NICOLAS HAYEK

TRANSLATED BY PIERRE-YVES DONZÉ AND RICHARD WATKINS

PETER LANG

Bern · Berlin · Bruxelles · Frankfurt am Main · New York · Oxford · Wien

Table of Contents

Introduction	1
1. The Swiss Watch Industry during the first part of the 19th century (1800–1870)	5
1.1 The triumph of établissage	7
An example of an établisseur: the DuBois family of Le Locle	12
Why was établissage successful?	13
1.2 The technical evolution of products	15
An innovation directed to the quality of products	15
The hard beginnings of mechanization	18
1.3 The outlets of the Swiss watch industry: the global market	19
1.4 Rival nations	22
2. The challenge of industrialization (1870–1918)	29
2.1 The shock of Philadelphia: the American competitors	30
2.2 The structural modernization of Swiss watchmaking	33
The emergence of the factory	34
Birth of the machine tools industry	42
The modernization of watchmaking schools	44
Banks and the modernization of watchmaking	47
The organization of trade unions	49
A limited industrial concentration	53
2.3 Selling: evolution of products and markets	56
The beginning of mass communication	58
2.4 Towards organized capitalism	61
The blooming of employers' associations	62
The Société Intercantonale des Industries du Jura – Chambre Suisse de l'Horlogerie	65
The temptation of cartels	66

2.5	The Swiss watch industry during World War I	68
	The production of munitions	68
	The closure of the Russian market	70
3.	The watchmaking cartel (1920–1960)	77
3.1	The problem of chablonnage and the struggle against industrial transplanted	78
	The United States	81
	Japan	83
3.2	The maintenance of an industrial district structure	85
3.3	The setting up of the cartel	87
	The adoption of watchmaking agreements (1928)	87
	Setting up a trust: the creation of the ASUAG (1931)	91
	The legal intervention of the State (1934)	96
	The labor peace agreement	99
3.4	The consequences of the cartel	101
	The maintenance of the structures	101
	The creation of the Société suisse pour l'industrie horlogère SA (SSIH)	103
	The failure of the struggle against chablonnage and the emergence of new watchmaking nations	105
3.5	New products, new markets	108
4.	Liberalization and globalization (1960–2010)	117
4.1	Decartelization	119
	Maintaining control over Swiss production	121
4.2	The quartz revolution	122
4.3	The origins of the “watchmaking crisis”	125
4.4	Industrial concentration and the appearance of watch groups	130
	The first wave of mergers	131
	The birth of the Swatch Group	133
	The main watch groups in the 2000s	136

An independent firm: Rolex	137
The exception of Geneva: the evolution of luxury watch makers during the second part of the 20th century	139
4.5 The globalization of ownership and manufacturing	142
Some subcontractors coping with globalization: the case makers	143
4.6 Towards luxury	146
Conclusion	153
References	155