

The Caring Motivation

---

---

An Integrated Theory

---

---

OFRA MAYSELESS

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments xiii

1. Introduction 1

- Caring as motivation 2
- Caring as fundamental 2
- Caring as manifested in diverse domains 3
- Individual differences 3
- Why is this book necessary? 4
- The organization of this book 5

PART I CONCEPTUAL FRAMEWORKS REGARDING CARING

Part I Introduction 9

2. Spiritual Views of Caring: Caring as Divine 11

- Christianity 12
- Buddhism 12
- Judaism and Kabbalah 13
- Contemporary spiritualities 14
- Chapter conclusion 15

3. Evolutionary Approaches to Caring/Caregiving 17

- Parental care 18
- Caring for nonprogeny 19

Caring for in-group vs. out-group members	22
Selective investment theory	23
Developmental processes related to caring in our evolutionary history	25
Individual differences	27
Chapter conclusion	28

4. Empathic Processes as Key Experiences in Caring 30

Evolutionary development of empathic processes	32
Empathy	33
Concern, compassion, and sympathy—the motivation to care	35
Modulation of empathic responses	37
Chapter conclusion	41

5. Biological Bases of Caregiving 43

Animal studies	43
Neurohormonal basis of human caring	44
Oxytocin in human parenting and caring	45
Oxytocin and caring in romantic relations	48
Oxytocin and caring with strangers	49
Modulation of oxytocin's effects on caring processes	51
Genetics and caring	53
Chapter conclusion	55

6. Attachment Theory and Caregiving 57

The concept of behavioral systems	58
Caregiving as a behavioral system in parenting	60
Caregiving in romantic relations	61
The importance of warmth and emotional bonding in caregiving	63
A broader view of caregiving	65
Chapter conclusion	69

7. Feminist Perspectives 71

Caring as the sphere of women	71
Caring and mothering are not freely chosen by women	72
Women and caregiving are devalued and deemed inferior in patriarchal society	72
Mothering as a way to subordinate women and relegate them to an inferior status in patriarchal society	73
The idealistic and “natural” perception of mothering as another way of subduing women	73

Mothering as involving ambivalence—love and hate	74
Mothering as involving thinking and sophistication based on practice	74
How do women become caregivers?	75
Why patriarchal society adopted a negative evaluation of women, mothering, and caregiving	75
Masculinity and femininity	77
Reconciliation and utopian projections into the future	78
Chapter conclusion	80

Part I Conclusion 81

PART II MANIFESTATIONS OF CARING AND CAREGIVING IN DIFFERENT DOMAINS AND CONTEXTS

Part II Introduction 85

8. Caring for Familiar Others 89

Caring in parent-child relations	89
Compassionate love and social support	97
Caregiving in romantic relations—an attachment perspective	101
“Caregiving”—caring for others with mental or physical health problems	108
Chapter conclusion	110

9. Caring for Strangers: Conceptual Perspectives 112

Generativity	114
Prosocial behavior	116
Altruism	122
Chapter conclusion	140

10. Caring for Strangers: Examples of Caring and Nurturance 141

Volunteering	141
Money donations and generosity	148
Mentoring	153
Chapter conclusion	162

11. Caring for Nonhuman Entities 163

Caring for pets	164
Caring for plants and gardens	168

Caring for inanimate objects and abstract entities 174

Chapter conclusion 182

12. Caring in Different Social Roles and Contexts 183

Caring in teaching and schools 183

Caring in the workplace—caring as a profession (the helping professions) 187

Caring in the workplace—caring in organizations (organizational citizenship behaviors) 191

Leadership and caring 195

Apology, forgiveness, and reconciliation: coping with transgressions in dyadic relations, groups, and nations 197

Chapter conclusion 200

Part II Conclusion 202

PART III THE DEVELOPMENT OF CARING AND INDIVIDUAL DIFFERENCES

Part III Introduction 207

13. The Developmental Course of the Motivation to Care: Ontogenic Development of Caring 208

The early incipience of the motivation to care 208

Childhood and adolescence—the powerful role of socialization 214

Adolescence—puberty, loyalty in peer groups, caring bonds, and caring in romantic relations and across differences 224

Adulthood—primacy of caring bonds and generativity 227

Chapter conclusion 232

14. Individual Differences in Caring 234

The development of individual differences in caring 235

Prosocial personality disposition 241

Multidimensionality of prosocial behavior 243

Individual differences in how people care—caring styles 245

Chapter conclusion 256

15. Sex/Gender Differences in Caregiving 257

Evolutionary and biological accounts 258

“Fight or flight” vs. “tend and befriend” approaches to stress 261

Feminist and psychoanalytic approaches 263

Anthropological and cross-cultural perspectives	264
What can we make of men's and women's caring? A proposed resolution	267
Chapter conclusion	273

Part III Conclusion 275

PART IV A CONCEPTUAL MODEL OF CARING AS A MOTIVATION

Part IV Introduction 279

16. The “Caring Motivational System”: Fundamental, Innate, Complex, and Sophisticated (Composition and Operation) 282
- Caring as fundamental 282
  - The nature of the caring motivation as a complex and sophisticated motivational system 284
  - Kinds of involvement and care 286
  - Intrinsic motivation and autonomous vs. controlled regulation as part of the caring motivation 290
  - The importance of conscious decisions and unconscious instinctual processes 293
  - The interplay between the caring motivational system and other motivational systems 295
  - The importance of balanced and judicious enactment of care 296
  - The universal path of development of the caring motivation 297
  - Chapter conclusion 297
17. The “Caring Motivational System”: General, Encompassing, Diverse, and Flexible (Similarity and Diversity) 299
- Caring as a general motivation—similarity across different domains and targets 299
  - Caregiving targets organized as a fuzzy set 301
  - Diversity, flexibility, and multidimensionality—distinctions among the different manifestations of caring 303
  - Interrelations among the different manifestations of caring in the same person (within-individual diversity and flexibility) 308
  - Prevalence of prosocial predispositions and the advantage of interindividual diversity 310
  - Chapter conclusion 311
18. Tying the Diverse Conceptual Perspectives Together: Ultimate and Proximate Causes 313
- Ultimate causation—“what for” questions 313
  - Proximal or direct causes for providing care—an overview 315

Different routes to arousing care: empathy, perspective taking, morality, and meaning/purpose 317

Psychological processes relevant to the formation and maintenance of caring bonds 319

Unintended consequences of caring that may sustain caring 326

The parenthood paradox revisited 330

Chapter conclusion 331

19. The Nature of the Human Species: Conceptual and Applied Implications 333

The shift in zeitgeist regarding the centrality of care and the wish to give 334

The caring motivational system in the context of major human dichotomies 336

Caring as a reflection of our daimon 339

Caring and our sense of life's meaning and purpose 340

Caring as self-actualization 344

Caring as reflecting our spiritual core 345

Implications for research 348

Applied implications 350

Chapter conclusion 352

20. Summary and Major Contributions 355

Summary of the main tenets of my conceptual perspective on caring 355

The main contributions of this volume and the suggested conceptual model 358

Final concluding remarks 362

References 363

About the Author 407

Index 409